What can I solve for you?

Bringing my diverse and rich experience in special education, I help school districts navigate conflicts and problems in this vital and complex area as well as the laws that govern it.

What's it like to work with me?

It's important to me that my clients know I'm always on their side as their strong, helpful and accessible counselor and advocate. I want them to feel supported and heard. Legal concepts and terms can be daunting to non-lawyers; I take the time to walk my clients through their legal problems and procedures and give them clear, understandable explanations of their specific issues.

Overview

Drawing on her legal acumen and outstanding research and writing skills, Jasey Mahon handles document review, creates pleadings, and prepares cases for due process hearings in a range of special education matters. Her commitment to drafting documents in a way that paints a picture of the specific legal situation, and that showcases a path towards a solution, keeps the child's best interests front and center.

Jasey's connection and familiarity with the special education area runs deep. Previously, she served as a nanny to a child with autism and got a first-hand look at the positive impact a knowledgeable and involved educational team made on the student's development and growth. A law school internship at the at the University of San Diego's Education and Disability Clinic exposed her to the parents' side of the special education equation. In addition, Jasey's mother has spent her career teaching in special education. These experiences have provided Jasey with multifaceted perspectives into the nuances of this important area.

Clients appreciate Jasey's hardworking and detail-oriented approach, as well as her clear and frequent communications with them. She always listens actively to their concerns, asks the right questions to elicit information, and ensures they are kept updated on developments in their matters.
